

A Message from the President of the Association of Caribbean Social Work Educators

It is a pleasure to welcome you to the Eighth Biennial Conference of Caribbean and International Social Work Educators.

Social work in the Caribbean continues to address social, political, economic and cultural problems, among them; HIV/AIDS, poverty, migration, unemployment, societal violence, domestic violence, child abuse and disaster management. Our world is changing rapidly and we need to be abreast of the changes as they affect us and those who use our services. In remarkable ways, the global changes at a technological level have made it possible for us to know more about each other, the societies in which we live, our commonalities and our differences without our having to leave our tiny corners of the Globe. As we have gathered from within the region, the Diaspora, and beyond for this event, I hope that you will find the many presentations and workshops informative and empowering. As you share your knowledge and expertise, establish connections and friendships I believe that you will find the conference another rewarding educational experience. ACSWE needs your ongoing support. Please consider subscribing to our publication, the Caribbean Journal of Social Work through which we share our ideas, research and best practices. I hope that you will sign up to become a member of ACSWE.

I would like to sincerely thank the Conference Coordinating Committee, of the Social Work Unit, The Department of Behavioural Sciences, St. Augustine Campus, University of the West Indies, the local Trinidadian and Tobagonian sponsors, the international sponsors and all other persons who have in some way worked to make this conference possible.

Letnie F. Rock, Ph.D. President, ACSWE.

A Message from the Conference Chair

Colleagues,

I extend a warm welcome to you all to this premiere event, the 8th Biennial Conference of Caribbean & International Social Work Educators. I anticipate a period of dynamic discourse characterised by challenges to our ways of thinking, opposition and agreement as we chart our way through a diverse and varied programme of research papers, workshops and discussion sessions. This conference is poised to advance new understanding of the current realities with which the profession must grapple and to craft culturally relevant models to aid us in our practice. It is my wish that we achieve this in an ambience of mutuality and respect and that in the process, we have fun as well.

Welcome to our beautiful twin-island country of Trinidad and Tobago.

Michele Sogren

Conference Chair & Vice-President, ACSWE

Global Health Issues:

Living a Life of Full Engagement
The Physical, Mental & Spiritual Dimensions

S. Tyrone Barksdale
Assistant to the Provost
Howard University
Washington, DC

This presentation will enable participants to assess their individual lifestyles and potentials in the context of better and more efficient utilization, not of time, but rather, proper energy management, which is the greatest threat to personal renewal, leadership capability, life capacity, intellectual achievement, individual fulfillment and overall engagement.

Women of Color and Depression Renee Goods

District of Columbia Public Schools Washington, DC

This presentation will address and discuss depression and include: a definition of depression, types of depression, depressive symptoms, possible causes of the illness, risk vs. protective factors, the danger of self-directed violence, as well as treatment strategies. Treatment considerations in working with Caribbean populations will also be shared.

Promoting Health and Wellness
Through a Community-Based Coalition

Carol Hill Lowe Adjunct Professor Howard University Washington, DC This paper presents a model of a community coalition to address unmet medical needs of chronically ill children. In the year 2000, over 10,000 children between the ages of 3 to 12 years who lived in Washington, DC suffered with asthma and asthma episodes --- almost twice the national average. Furthermore, African-American and Hispanic youngsters were significantly at-risk for asthma due to poverty, hazardous urban environmental conditions (especially exposure to smoke and moisture in this region), inconsistent primary care follow-up, and the lack of community awareness about the seriousness of asthma. Many of the strategies, skills, and lessons learned in working in coalitions that promote health and wellness are transferable to other communities and health care systems and will be presented at this workshop.

Clinical Interventions with Caribbean Students Transitioning to American Educational Institutions: Secondary and University (Tertiary) Levels Claudia Lawrence-Webb Baltimore City Public School System Baltimore, Maryland

This presentation will discuss and identify some of the adjustment issues of Latin/Caribbean students in public educational institutions in the U.S. at the high school and university level. Strategies will be recommended for intervening with students and their families and suggestions will be made for preparing students for educational experiences in the U.S.

Brenda Harris

A Comprehensive Approach to Supporting Children's School Readiness

Project Manager, Pre-Kindergarten Incentive Program Comprehensive Services Washington, DC

This presentation presents an overview of the District of Columbia Pre-Kindergarten demonstration project for 375 three and four year old children in 2005-2006. The programs provide appropriate activities and learning experiences that help prepare young, high-risk children living in underserved communities for school. Strategies for intervention with this population of children will be presented, with special attention given to development of a comprehensive team approach. Information regarding developing partnerships with parents, schools, non profit traditional child development centers and private providers, health and medical systems will be provided. The demonstration project is based upon the idea that Comprehensive Services delivered to children and families early will increase school success. This program was designed to address the needs of all children globally and may be replicated nationally and internationally.

African American Males' Exposure to Family and Community Violence: A Descriptive Study of Suburban Gang Membership

Willie E Ringold
Psychotherapist
So Others Might Eat
Washington, DC

This presentation examines the relationship between gang membership and exposure to community and family violence among suburban African American male gang members. It was hypothesized that suburban African American gang members have higher levels of exposure to direct, indirect, and family violence than non-gang members. Strategies for intervention with families and children are presented and recommendation are made for collaboration with schools, the church and other community organizations to address the phenomenon of gang membership throughout the Diaspora.

Mental Health in the Caribbean

Anita Mingo 2nd Year MSW Student Howard University Washington, D.C.

This presentation presents the findings of a study conducted to evaluate mental health problems and treatments among 3,410 older adults age 60-102 residing in two Caribbean countries: Cuba and Barbados. The sample was predominantly female (62%), and was predominantly young-old (60-74) with 8 years or less of education. Data was employed from the SABE (Survey on Health, Well-Being, and Aging in Latin America and the Caribbean, 2000). The analysis provides important information about the presence of mental health illness and availability of treatments in diverse cultures and health care delivery systems. Key findings suggest that the two countries are surprisingly similar in terms of demographics and major psychiatric conditions. Cuba had more reported nervous problems and lower general health compared to Barbados. This may reflect a higher degree of screening for mental health problems in Cuba. These findings describe associations but not causal relationships. This presentation will offer recommendations and practice strategies that will assist with identifying additional ways for identifying and treating those who are untreated.

The Employee Assistance Program

Jennifer Turnbull (EAP) Miami VA Medical Center Miami. FL

This presentation will provide an overview of the EAP program and offer information regarding required profession credentials, services provided and the benefits to all employees, including administration and management. Opportunities for employment will also be discussed. Special attention will be given to providing an overview of confidential EAP services and programs to assist social work employees with an array of problem situations.

Homelessness in the United States Virgin Islands (USVI)

Adelle Belle-BarryUniversity of the Virgin Islands.
St. Thomas, VI

Each of the four inhabited islands of this demographically diverse territory has its own unique social characteristic. However, the issue of homelessness is perhaps one of the most vexing problems that the Territory is currently experiencing. The issue of homelessness in the USVI has not been an academic one, until now, and it has not been a political focus, even in this election year. The risk factors of homelessness in the Virgin Islands consistently identified substance abuse and mental illness, and poverty as primary factors. The relationship between these conditions makes it difficult, at least, and most impossible for the homeless to obtain adequate housing. This paper focuses on the complex problem of homelessness in the USVI and the efforts to end it by 2012.
