“ Parliamentary Scrutiny of the Executive – Effective Scrutiny in the Contemporary Parliament”

This paper intends to examine in the contemporary world, what new measures have been adopted to enable the Scrutiny of the Executive and how effective these measures have been assessed to be. The paper also intends to look at how the gap between the Parliament and the People can be bridged, thus increasing the demand for transparency and subsequent Scrutiny of the Executive and finally how increased scrutiny can address issues such as the dividing line between the Legislature and the Administrative Arm that supports the Legislature, impropriety in Government Office and the perceived culture of secrecy that surrounds Parliamentary Practice.
