

ACTUARIAL SCIENCE CLUB

The University of The West Indies Actuarial Science Club is an organization run by students who are pursuing a degree or who have an interest in the field of Actuarial Science. It is one of the younger clubs at the St. Augustine Campus, being founded as recently as 2015. It aims to enhance students' knowledge on actuarial science including available jobs and opportunities, programmes at universities abroad (for student exchange as well as further study) and examinations offered by professional bodies. The club also seeks to strike a balance between educational and leisure activities and organises recreational events for the benefit of its members.

As the degree is becoming increasingly competitive and the content known to be some of the most challenging at the university, the Actuarial Science Club seeks to provide resources to enable its members to attain their maximum potential – both when taking courses at the university and when taking professional examinations. It also strives to educate its members of the various paths available to graduates of the university, for example, the attainment of various professional actuarial designations or further study in related fields such as finance.

Over the past three years of existence, the club has hosted such events as: a jazz concert and lecture by Professor Samuel Broverman (a lecturer at the University of Toronto and author of manuals for professional examinations); seminars by professionals both within and outside of the field of Actuarial Science and related fields; all-fours tournaments and movie days. In 2015, the club and its members were afforded an exceptional opportunity to attend the annual conference of the Caribbean Actuarial Association when it was held in Trinidad and Tobago.

The club aims to provide all members with the necessary tools to set and achieve their academic and professional goals within the field of actuarial science.
