MESSAGE FROM THE MINISTER WITH THE RESPONSIBILITY FOR GENDER AFFAIRS

I am pleased to say that the Government of Jamaica remains committed to the principle of gender equality. This obligation demands that policy formulation and implementation is gender-sensitive. Over the years, in keeping with this resolve, several measures have been undertaken to promote gender balance between women and men. This includes the different development approaches, such as; Woman in Development, Women and Development, Gender and Development and by extension, the gender mainstreaming process.

One key gender mainstreaming strategy is the development of a National Policy for Gender Equality spearheaded by the Bureau of Gender Affairs, which will allow for gender to be more definitively included in public policies, programmes, plans and projects. The gender mainstreaming strategy is more holistic in scope as it incorporates a human rights approach involving the government, private sector and civil society in order to ensure that women and men have equal access to opportunities, resources, and rewards towards promoting sustainable human and national development

This Policy has been on the agenda for a long time, but it is now a reality. It outlines implementation strategies for gender mainstreaming as well as addresses several of the concerns of women and men garnered through the various consultations. It also includes emerging issues that have impacted on gender equality over the last few years. It allows for an integrated, multi-sectoral and coordinated gender mainstreaming approach to gender equality.

The NPGE is timely and strategic as it sets out a framework that brings together, concepts, meanings, trends and initiatives to analyse the gender process and to influence development plans and strategies, thus making it more relevant. This Policy addresses the various facets of gender inequality and further builds on the work that is already in progress in order to take into account the varied and different circumstances, experiences, socio-economic realities and concerns of women and men. It seeks to highlight unfair and unequal gender-related outcomes, so that Government can adequately address these in order to achieve equal and equitable sustainable human and national development.

I wish to thank our the Canada/CARICOM Gender Equality Programme (CCGEP) funded by the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) which have contributed greatly to the development of this Policy. Thanks also to the Gender Advisory Committee who guided the development process. It is my desire as Minister of Youth, Sports and Culture, with responsibility for Gender Affairs, that this Policy will be given the necessary priority, in keeping with the principle of gender equality as well as our local, regional and international commitments.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

At the national level, Jamaica has no gender policy that specifically addresses the needs of both women and men. What exists is a 1987 National Policy Statement on Women; the policy statement was reviewed in 2001 in order to assess the effectiveness of its strategies in light of the shift in the discourse from Women in Development towards Gender and Development. Since its inception, the policy and its directives have been bolstered through various regional and international agreements, to which Jamaica is a party, aimed towards gender justice and gender equality.

The Vision 2030 Jamaica National Development Plan makes a national commitment to redressing long-term systemic discrimination against women, identifying and overcoming the limitations to the empowerment of women and men and ultimately creating a society that values gender balance, equality and equity.

The Bureau of Women's Affairs (BWA) (to be renamed the Bureau of Gender Affairs (BGA)) is the national machinery and agency for advocating for and supporting the implementation of the National Policy for Gender Equality (NPGE).

Based on the most recent and available gender differentiated data, there are significant inequalities experienced by women and men in Jamaica. However, there is also a significant lack in the availability of sex-disaggregated data across sectors.

Starting in 2004, the BWA (BGA) in conjunction with the Gender Advisory Committee (GAC) conducted consultations in keeping with the Government's Consultation Code with numerous stakeholders to determine the need for and inform the eventual parameters of the NPGE.

The implementation of the NPGE is crucial to the attainment of Jamaica's development goals while meeting regional and international commitments towards gender equality and women's empowerment. The third Millennium Development Goal (MDG 3) aims at promoting gender equality and empowering women.

The policy rationale and purpose seeks to propel the historical and political movement for gender equality by providing a policy framework of professional analysis.

The vision statement of the Policy presents a rights-based approach to achieving gender equality, and promotes programmes which must be developed against an understanding of the international commitments

Gender equality requires equal enjoyment by women and men of the socially valued goods, opportunities, resources and rewards. Gender equity suggests that women and men have equal life chances. The NPGE aims to shift national policy-making and implementation from a gender neutral position which presumes that women and men always access all socially valued goods equally, to a gender aware position which acknowledges that barriers exist which prevent equal access and thus creates inequality.

The NPGE is a cross cutting policy and is in line with several policy and legislative actions being undertaken by the GOJ.

The NPGE must be informed by the guiding principles of social justice; human rights; equality and equity; good governance, accountability and transparency and participation.

To achieve gender equality in all the following strategies and tools must be deployed: gender mainstreaming; gender responsive budgeting; gender aware information; gender analysis; cross-sectoral partnering; gender training; gender aware monitoring and evaluation, and the legislation of temporary special measures

All public and private stakeholders are responsible for employing gender mainstreaming strategies with the guidance and support of the BWA.

The NPGE will be monitored and evaluated by the Gender Advisory Council.

Currently, several MDAs are actively implementing some aspects of gender mainstreaming in their policies, plans and programmes either through their own budgets or with the support of international development partners. The success of the NPGE will require the commitment of resources, financial and otherwise, from all government ministries, departments and agencies.

The policy framework suggests that women and men need to have equal opportunities to work together in partnership to achieve gender equality. This translates into gains not only for women but also for men and ultimately, a society as a whole. The cornerstone of Jamaica's development is our people; therefore eliminating barriers to equal participation in society for women and men will translate into sustainable human and national development.

BACKGROUND

The Government of Jamaica (GOJ) has made a commitment to the principle of gender equality as a part of the initiative to address the unequal arrangements and long term systemic discrimination that has worked against women and men in Jamaican society. Implicit in this commitment is the need to redress the negative imbalances that women have and continue to suffer. This commitment was made evident in 1974 when the Government first established a Women's Desk as part of the National Machinery for Women's Affairs, which was then upgraded to the Bureau of Women's Affairs (BWA) in 1975.

Since 1995, in keeping the global shift from Women and Development (WAD) to Gender and Development (GAD) the Bureau began to adopt a gendered perspective. Since 2007, there has been a greater thrust towards involving men in the gender dialogue. The BWA is the state agency and national machinery for women's empowerment and an advocate for gender issues and was consequently mandated to incorporate a national gender mainstreaming process. As a result, the Bureau began to incorporate gender mainstreaming language into policy documents, gender fora, and inter-sectoral discussions. Upon the approval of the NPGE, the BWA shall be officially recognized and re-branded as the Bureau of Gender Affairs (BGA).

With funding received from the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB), in 1997, the BWA began to specifically put programmes in place to incorporate a gender perspective on violence against women in a series of justice system workshops. The objectives of these workshops were to sensitize justice system personnel on issues of violence against women/gender-based violence.

The Bureau requested assistance from the Commonwealth Secretariat as a follow-up to the regional workshop to assess and carry out awareness sessions on incorporating a Gender Management System (GMS) with public and private sector entities, NGOs and the media. The Commonwealth Secretariat team also met specifically with Ministers from the Ministries of Health, Education, Finance, Transport and others to sensitize them on the importance of incorporating gender as a core aspect of a development policy tool towards the achievement of gender equality.

The GOJ established the Gender Advisory Council (GAC) to develop the framework for the establishment of the NPGE. The main objective of the GAC was to, in conjunction with the Bureau, advise the Government on the strategic policy direction for the gender portfolio (See appendix 4, for a list of the members of the GAC). The GAC was also mandated, through a consultative process, to identify a strategy consistent with CARICOM's gender mainstreaming strategy and other relevant international commitments, for addressing obstacles to gender equality and the empowerment of women in key sectors of the society.

SITUATIONAL ANALYSIS

Understanding the Jamaican Context

Jamaica became the first English speaking country in the Caribbean to achieve universal adult suffrage and to grant women the right to be elected to Parliament. It was a process that many thought would bring an enlightened approach to democracy and governance, as well as a starting point for gender equality. However, in contemporary Jamaican society, gender remains an indicator of inequality and inequity.

The country's efforts towards achieving equality for all citizens, has only recently become marginally informed through gender analysis and thus many national policies and laws aimed at redressing inequality and achieving social justice have been gender-blind. This has been to the detriment of both women and men—relationships, families and communities are better served when men and women feel equally empowered and are encouraged to access socially valued goods. Several key national sectors as education, labour, manufacturing, trade, health and security are distorted because of the disproportionate gender distributions and this hampers the country's development.

The 2009 Economic and Social Survey of Jamaica (ESSJ), states that women make up 50.7% of the population, however, they are woefully under-represented in the public and private decision making spheres of the country. Although Jamaica has made an international commitment by way of the Millennium Development Goals (MDG) to have at least 30% of women in parliament by 2015, the figure currently stands at 14%. Furthermore, a 2008 study found that women only constituted 16% of places on the boards of publicly listed companies and that 42.3% of these women reported being on multiple boards. The 2009 ESSJ further notes that although current enrolment rate of women (40.7) in tertiary institutions is roughly twice that of men (20.3), females outperform males at all levels of the educational system and the job seeking rate of women (9.0) is greater than that of men (5.8)—the female unemployment rate stands at 14.8 compared to the male unemployment rate of 8.6. Despite a numerical and skill advantage, women are unable to command a fair and equitable position in the labour market. Health-wise, maternal mortality rates have failed to significantly improve, women and girls have higher rates of depression and women and girls between ages of 10 and 29 are more likely than their male counterparts to contract HIV/AIDS.

Despite the lack of overt institutional barriers to access to education, men are increasingly under-represented and under-performing in the national educational system. Although the 2009 male enrolment rates are more or less even with the female enrolment rates at the infant, primary and secondary levels, there is a dramatic decline in male enrolment rates at the tertiary level as indicated above. Furthermore, the majority of people in conflict with the justice system in Jamaica are male; in 2009, 98.2% of the persons arrested and charged for major crimes were male and 90.6% of the persons admitted to adult correctional institutions were male. Meanwhile, 60.8% of the reported victims of major crimes were male, the majority of missing adults (68.5%) were male and 92.6% of suicides were committed by men. Men are unable to access paternity leave; fail to report sickness and illness in early stages and are more susceptible overall, to HIV/AIDS. This statistical sample is telling of the disproportionate levels of risk, mortality and social disadvantage faced by men and boys on a daily basis in spite of (and ultimately because of) the persistence of a patriarchal status quo. Appendix 5 offers a more detailed gender analysis of the various sectors.

Despite these everyday realities, there is resistance to considering gender as a national development indicator and many Jamaicans still believe that gender singularly refers to women and 'gender empowerment' results in the marginalization of men in society. It is this belief that fuels scepticism around a gendered development approach and the failure to recognize that when men remain in key positions of power in every strata of society gender inequality is reproduced even to the detriment of other men. Furthermore, there is a deficit in the sex-disaggregated data that is available nationally to support policy and law making and implementation to achieve gender equality. In order to understand the how gender influences the lives of citizens; this information must be regularly collected and analysed.

In 2004, the Bureau, in conjunction with the GAC conducted a series of national consultations in accordance with the National Consultation Code, to assess the national context for the development of a National Policy for Gender Equality. Six (6) consultations were held with women's organizations, the public and private sector, the general public, as well as a consultation with special interest groups representing the Uniformed Forces, the Press Association of Jamaica (PAJ), the Medical Association of Jamaica (MAJ), faith based organizations (FBOs), men's groups, youth groups and the Combined Disabilities Association (CDA). During these consultations the following issues were raised:

- Attempts to mainstream gender in economic systems and structures and ensure more equal opportunities and benefits for both sexes is constrained by entrenched ideologies and practices and role socialization resulting in a sexual division of labour which underpins capitalist economic systems and the dichotomy between gendered private and public domains;
- In keeping with prevailing notions of gender roles, in relation to work, the most important issue for men was remuneration and level of income while for women it was access to maternity leave. These issues were also seen as important in relation to the increasing phenomenon of female headed households;
- Factors militating against the young (particularly boys) obtaining an education were seen as lack of financial resources and the immaturity of parents who did not value education both as a means to an end and an end in itself and who could not assist with homework etc. and thereby contributing to intergenerational illiteracy and delinquency;
- Males are represented in administrative positions in the education system but not in classrooms. Males should therefore be provided with incentives to enter the teaching profession;
- Rural women do the same kinds of work as men, especially in agriculture, but because women do not own their land, their efforts are often unrecognised.

- Male involvement in domestic violence as perpetrators is linked to macho definitions of men as unemotional beings who do not talk through issues but act out feelings of discontent and frustration in violent aggressive ways. To act otherwise is to be effeminate and not meet up to the heterosexual male norm;
- Women are in leadership positions in the household; women have skills and experiences that are critical to decision making. This skill and role must be carried forward at the community level.
- Little political will for enforcing existing legislation and gender-specific policies in particular;
- The most sustainable measure for channelling legislation on sexual harassment at the workplace is to create a partnership with trade unions.
- Police reluctant to investigate violence between heterosexual couples – they do so more readily in cases of violence between two men if they are in a homosexual relationship;
- Female generated domestic abuse goes unreported because the men are embarrassed to make reports and if they do the police are contemptuous.

A more comprehensive list of the findings from the national consultations can be found in Appendix 6.

Regional Context

A study on gender mainstreaming initiatives in the region commissioned by the United Nations Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (UNECLAC) uncovered serious weaknesses in the region's approach to gender mainstreaming and found a general lack of understanding on the meaning and implications of a Gender and Development (GAD) approach.

In 2000, the Beijing +5 Follow-Up meeting was convened by the CARICOM Secretariat to consider how member states could more effectively mainstream gender into their work. An agreement was subsequently reached to focus on three (3) strategic areas: Education with a focus on building human capital; Health with a focus on HIV/AIDS; Poverty and the Economy with a focus on the gender dimensions of the implementation of the CARICOM Single Market and Economy (CSME). An agreement was also reached on the establishment of a Task Force on Gender Mainstreaming. The main objective of the Task Force was to identify gender mainstreaming strategies for the three areas of focus. The mandate as part of the strategies was to: agree on definitions (gender, gender equality, gender equity, gender mainstreaming); agree on steps to be taken to mainstream gender in the areas of focus; present recommendations.

Although the gender mainstreaming process was prioritised for three (3) focus areas, it was agreed that the process should begin with education (Heads of CARICOM Women's /Gender Bureau Meeting Sept 2002). This was agreed on since there was already a developed three – year implementation work plan for Education, a number of the recommended programme options were already being implemented, and the effectiveness of the approach would be demonstrated based on what was accomplished. At a more structural level it was also proposed that the regional Gender and Development Unit be relocated to the Programme on Human Resource Development in the Directorate of Human and Social Development. This would be consistent with the overall thrust of the Directorate which already included education and labour as sub-programmes.

Although all CARICOM states have ratified CEDAW, only Guyana, Trinidad and Tobago and St. Lucia have legislation that prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex with regards to employment and the provision of goods and services. In Guyana and St. Lucia the legislation applies to the state and civil society. Guyana has the widest gender gap in the region with respect to its labour indicators but, through the legislation of gender quotas, it has achieved 30% of women in parliament. In a 2010 study, commissioned by the IDB, comparing Jamaica and Barbados, it was found that males' earnings surpassed that of females' by between 14% and 27% of average females' wages in Barbados and between 8% and 17% of average females' wages in Jamaica. Overall, the region has made strides in achieving gender equality but there is still significant work to be done leading up to the 2015 deadline of the MDGs.

International Context

Globally, efforts to promote gender equality have shifted over the years in focus from Women in Development (WID) to Women and Development (WAD) to Gender and Development (GAD). Each term has been associated with a varied set of underlying assumptions, which led to the formation of different strategies for the participation of women in development processes.

As a result the United Nations Decade for Women (1975-1985), WID recognised that women's experience of development and societal change differed from that of men. The idea of addressing women's practical needs as opposed to their strategic needs was central to this approach. The WAD approach focused on the relationship between women and development processes rather than primarily on strategies for the integration of women in development. The GAD approach examines the social construction and assignment of specific roles, responsibilities, and expectations of women and men. This approach, unlike WID and WAD, welcomes the potential contributions of men and women towards equity and social justice.

The gender-related development index (GDI) which was introduced in the Human Development Report 1995 is designed to capture how the Human Development Index (HDI) is gendered. The greater the gender disparity in basic human development, the lower is a country's GDI relative to its HDI. In 2009, Jamaica's GDI value was 0.762 compared to its HDI value of 0.766; therefore its GDI is 99.5% of its HDI value. Out of the 155 countries, which were measured for the HDR, 48 countries have a better ratio than Jamaica's.

Jamaica is a signatory to several international agreements, which call for robust commitments towards gender equality and these are noted in the section entitled International Agreements.

LEGISLATIVE AND POLICY FRAMEWORK

Current Legislation

The law and the legal environment in the Jamaican judicial system is itself characterised by gender inequality. This inequality exists as a result of the unequal gender dynamics, rules, norms, values, and the prevalence of patriarchy that govern the broader social and institutional context within which the justice system operates. All these work together to influence how women and men are treated under the law. As a result, some legal issues are viewed only from the male perspective (for example, only females can be victims of rape) or when problems of women are trivialised or over simplified (for example, domestic violence cases), or when women are not given the same credibility as men (for example, rape cases).

Similarly, domestic violence and sexual harassment against men by women are still trivialised; domestic violence in same sex unions is derided and no avenue exists for redress in the justice system as a result of homophobia. Alimony for men is still disparaged and there is no legal provision for paternity leave.

Jamaica's progress in law reform remains slow as it directly related to changing the legal status of women compared to men and vice versa. Century-old statutes tainted by traditional concepts of the place, abilities, and potential of women and men remain in the law. The intention is to bring gender neutrality to the laws, regarding legal protection from sexual violence and exploitation, and to remove from the law the perpetuation of gender stereotypes and discrimination.

The CEDAW recognises the important role of law reform in achieving gender equality. Also, the Commonwealth Secretariat has since developed Model Legislation for the Caribbean region that the GOJ's Legal Reform Unit has used to assist in the development of domestic legislation to address women's legal status and rights issues as well as gender inequality. Gender sensitive analysis on the part of the Bureau has been useful in this reform process.

Recently, the legal environment has been undergoing a process of slow change especially for women against whom the majority of laws discriminate. The Bureau had mandated a legal team to do a revision of the legal status of women to ensure that they had full and equal rights and protection of the law on par with men. This mandate was in keeping with the Bureau's role to advocate for speedy amendments of shortcomings in the laws that sanction gender-based discrimination, gender-based violence, and sexual offences and those which continued to perpetuate gender stereotypes and discrimination against female and male victims. This effort is in keeping with international and regional trends to ensure that all the laws would now be gender-neutral so that the legal concept that women and men are equal before the law could now be more of a reality.

Since then, recent amendments were made to the Domestic Violence Act, which now provides redress and protection to women affected by domestic violence. The Property Rights of Spouses Act, 2004 introduced new statutory rules to provide for the equitable division of assets between spouses upon marriage or relationship breakdown. This Act, although gender neutral in its provisions should be beneficial to women in its practical application, as the deficiencies under the old law have been removed which formerly placed women at a disadvantage in proving entitlement to property. The Maintenance Act, 2005 replaces the old Act and makes comprehensive provisions for maintenance within the family. It confers equal rights and obligations on spouses with respect to the support of each other and their children. Accordingly “spouse” is similarly defined to include a de facto spouse. The Sexual Offences Bill, was passed by Parliament in September 2009 which covered amendments to the Incest Punishment Act and the Offences against the Person Act. The new Sexual Offences Act when fully adopted will also establish the offence of marital rape, make new provisions for the prosecution of rape and other sexual offences and remove age limitation on incest.

The Child Pornography Prevention Bill to criminalize the production, possession and distribution of child pornography was passed in July 2009. This legislation made it a criminal act to view or download child pornography from the Internet and is expected to reduce the incidence of child abuse and sexual violence against children. The Bureau, in making its written submission to the reform process to enact legislation on this issue highlighted the need to integrate a gender perspective to allow for an analysis of the differential impact on girls as well as on boys.

Finally, the Act to Amend the Jamaican Constitution to Provide for a Charter of Rights, introduced in 1999 proposes to bar discrimination on the basis of one’s sex.

However, it must be noted that legislative reform by itself will not achieve gender equality especially where gendered roles (and interpretation of law) tend to be rooted in and built on custom, tradition, religion, and deeply held ideology and beliefs about what constitutes “proper” social ordering.

National Policy Linkages

The current national policy framework is such that there are policies in existence, in draft or being contemplated which have implications for the equal and equitable distribution of socially valued resources among the women and men of Jamaica. Chief among them is the Gender Sector Plan of the Vision 2030 Jamaica National Development Plan of 2010 which acknowledges gender as a cross-cutting issue for all national development initiatives.

Further to that, the following policies provide measures of equal access to government services and resources and the affirmation of the rights of all citizens which should have direct implications for gender equality and equity:

Draft National Housing Policy
Education: The Way Upward

Jamaica Justice System Reform Policy Agenda Framework
Jamaica's Revised Trade Policy
Justice Sector Transformation
National HIV/AIDs Policy
National Policy for Person with Disabilities
National Policy for Senior Citizens
National Policy on Children
National Population Policy
National Road Safety Policy
National Youth Policy: Jamaican Youth in Shaping the World
Reform of Social Safety Net
Sports Policy

This list is by no means exhaustive, as gender has implications for all government actions and initiatives; thus, though not stated in the language of all policies, there should be a generic intent to ensure equal outcomes for all Jamaican citizens regardless of sex.

Regional and International Agreements

The GOJ is a signatory to the following regional and international agreement which make commitments to gender equality:

The United Nations Decade for Women (1975-1985)
The Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW 1981)
The Nairobi World Conference on the Forward Looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women (1985)
The Cairo Programme of Action (ICPA) (1994)
The Beijing Platform for Action (1995)
The Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) (2000-2015)
Ten Year Review of the Beijing Platform for Action (Beijing+10)
The Commonwealth Plan of Action for Gender Equality (2005-2015)
The CARICOM Plan of Action (2005)
The Belem do Para Convention

NATIONAL POLICY FOR GENDER EQUALITY 2010

RATIONALE

The NPGE outlines Jamaica's commitment towards gender equality. It encapsulates the different outcomes expected in order to achieve gender equality. A national policy on gender would encourage the Jamaican community to recognize that development policy, as a multidimensional process, must involve the reduction of gender inequalities as an integral element of achieving broad-based equitable growth. This would contribute to good governance by highlighting and integrating the concerns of women and men in all the Government's development policies, plans and programmes. In this respect, a national policy on gender would provide an enabling environment for achieving the goal of fairness and socio-economic justice for women and men in keeping with the objectives of Vision 2030.

VISION

A society in which men and women have equal access to socially valued goods and are able to contribute to national development.

PURPOSE STATEMENT

To mainstream gender, within a human rights based framework, in all state institutions and their apparatuses, in partnership with private sector, non-governmental and civil society organizations, to ensure that females and males have equal access to opportunities, resources, and rewards in order to eliminate discrimination based on gender and to promote sustainable human development.

GOALS

1. To use the policy document as a strategic tool to guide a multi-faceted and multi-sectoral approach to gender equality.
2. To transform prevailing gender ideologies, inequitable gender relations and gendered governance practices at all levels of public sector organizations.
3. To create a socio-economic, political and legal environment free of discrimination on the basis of sex; where females and males, at all stages of the life-cycle, can enjoy their full human rights and develop their full potential as citizens.

OBJECTIVES

1. To reduce all forms of gendered discrimination and promote greater gender equality and social justice
2. To strengthen institutional mechanisms and develop the skills and tools required to mainstream gender in cultural, social, economic, and political institutions, structures, and systems.
3. To promote sustainable behaviour change and improve organizational effectiveness and the capacity of public sector entities to develop, implement and monitor gender responsive plans, projects, programmes, and policies.

GUIDING PRINCIPLES

Gender Equality and Social Justice

The NPGE is grounded in the belief that Jamaica is an egalitarian society, which values equality and dignity of each citizen by affording and facilitating their human rights. Gender equality is a human right and a just society recognizes and pursues this principle. In particular, the most vulnerable groups in society must be able to utilize the NPGE to improve their lot.

Political Leadership and Commitment

In order to counter the most entrenched gendered inequalities, significant and consistent leadership is required to raise and address gendered issues that are often hidden within the very structures, which support hierarchy and leadership. Therefore, political, business, religious and community leaders must model the principles of the NPGE for it to be successful.

Good Governance, Transparency and Accountability

An effective national implementation requires efficient, fiscally responsible and fair management of a process that is accessible to the public and allows for effective systems to redress injustices through good governance, transparency and accountability.

Multi-sectoral Approach and Partnerships

Gender is a crosscutting issue and therefore, the success of the NPGE relies on the strategic and balanced partnerships across all sectors with emphasis on bridging the public/private divide that has allowed the entrenchment of negative gendered power relationships.

Participatory Approach

A participatory approach is necessary to enable all stakeholders to offer meaningful contribution to this national engagement with gender equality and therefore the design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation must have built-in mechanisms to invite and welcome participation from all.

POLICY STRATEGIES AND TOOLS

Gender Mainstreaming

The GOJ shall adopt a gender perspective in all its national policies and programmes. The Beijing Platform for Action specifically promotes “an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective in all policies and programmes, so that before decisions are taken, an analysis is made of their respective effects on women and men” (1995). Gender mainstreaming is the most vital and difficult aspect of the strategic implementation of the NPGE as it requires all stakeholders to re-evaluate how they engage in their daily lives and it demands that a gender perspective be fully and effectively integrated into the operation of government and its partners.

Gender Focal Points (GFPs)

The GOJ shall establish Gender Focal Points (GFPs) in all ministries, departments and agencies (MDAs). Gender Focal Points shall act as responsibility centres in order to improve organizational effectiveness and capacity within the public sector. They shall develop, implement and monitor gender-sensitive policies, plans, programming and projects within their respective MDAs contribute to the coordination of critical information needed to fulfil local, regional and international requirements. GFPs shall be of high enough rank to be able to be effective in their roles and for them to have consistent influence on their organizations. Each GFP shall be responsible for reporting their progress to the Permanent Secretary or Executive Officer of his/her MDA while also reporting on a quarterly basis to the Executive Director of the BWA.

Gender Indicators

The GOJ, through the Statistical Institute of Jamaica (STATIN), the Planning Institute of Jamaica (PIOJ), and statistical and planning units within MDAs shall promote and develop the use of sex-disaggregated data and gender-sensitive indicators for gender impact analysis, policy appraisal, monitoring and evaluation. This shall be the chief mechanism for gathering the data necessary for gender analysis, sharing, and communicating the findings of the analysis having used sex disaggregated data and gender-sensitive indicators. International Development Partners will be engaged to provide technical assistance and support to strengthen the GOJ's capacity to develop gender indicators.

Gender Analysis

The GOJ shall employ Gender Analysis to guide the gender mainstreaming process. Gender analysis uses sex and gender as a way of conceptualising information and as such provides a framework for analysing and developing policies, and for conducting research and data collection. It is a systematic process that takes place throughout the course of a given activity and therefore involves development, implementation, monitoring, and evaluation. (See definition of key concepts and terms). Where there is bias or discrimination, gender analysis can point the way to more equitable and inclusive options. It also involves the collection and use of sex-disaggregated data and therefore can provide useful information about the roles, behaviour, and responsibilities of women and men within the organization.

Gender analysis can go as far as assessing how gender roles and gender-inequitable power relations may affect how and why individuals are resistant to change and how this in turn may affect the achievement of gender mainstreaming initiatives within an agency or ministry.

The outcome of this ongoing analysis will form the basis to promote behaviour change at the individual and organizational levels to create an environment in which women and men can function based on the goal of greater gender equality and equity.

Gender Training

The GOJ shall include gender awareness training as a part of the training offered to public service employees and elected officials. This training will be necessary to raise gender awareness, and to increase gender sensitivity to not only raise gender concerns within agencies and ministries but in order to build capacity in gender analysis and gender planning. Among the various types of training offered to public service employees by the Public Service Commission or central personnel office, gender awareness training should be included as a matter of course. It will therefore be necessary, as a high priority, to provide gender awareness training to GFPs so they can effectively fulfil their leadership role in the gender mainstreaming process.

Strategic Partnerships and Multi-Stakeholder Outreach

The GOJ shall prioritize partnerships with the non-public sector actors and entities in order to pursue the national gender equality agenda. Gender equality cannot be achieved simply through the efforts of the GOJ; partnerships must be forged with civil society and the for-profit and not-for-profit sectors. In order to effect a culture of change in society with respect to gender and development, the GOJ shall take the lead in promulgating the principle of gender equality and equity.

Gender Responsive Costing and Budgeting

The GOJ shall implement gender-responsive budgeting at the national and sectoral levels. Gender-responsive budgeting contributes to gender equality by paying attention to gender gaps in costing and allocates resources to support the accountability of programmes aimed at achieving gender equality. The traditional accounting for public expenditure is blind to the gendered differentiations that are created through the existence of (mostly) female unpaid labour in the household and voluntary services and how it enables and supports the consistency and efficiency of paid labour. Therefore, costing and budgeting at micro and macro levels, which fail to capture this facet of the marketplace, disregard the subsidies that unpaid labour offers to the economy.

Gender-Aware Monitoring and Evaluation

The GOJ shall develop and employ gender-aware monitoring and evaluation systems. Based on the outcome of the gender analysis, a gender-aware performance monitoring and evaluation system should appear as one of the critical mechanism through which organizational change can be achieved. This shall not be separate from the system that is currently in place but rather the current system should be consistently reviewed to ensure that there is a more gender-aware performance appraisal system that advances gender equality and equity.

The Public Service Commission shall play a key role in ensuring that the performance appraisal systems in use in the public sector are gender-sensitive. The system(s) should be able to measure: changes in individual and organizational standards of achievement, the extent to which individual staff members have acquired gender awareness (e.g. through gender training), and if they have applied that awareness in their work (e.g. through the achievement of gender goals or through the institution of gender-specific work programmes).

Temporary Special Measures (TSM)

The GOJ shall adopt According to Convention to Eliminate Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW), the adoption of temporary special measures to accelerate de facto equality between men and women is not and shall not be considered discriminatory. Therefore, in order to close seemingly insurmountable gaps, the GOJ shall use TSMs, such as legislated gender quotas, to address the lack of proportional representation of women in parliament. Such a measure could require a thirty percent (30%) minimum distribution of women among persons appointed to the Senate and the board of public bodies. Further, TSMs can be used to direct resources to help improve the matriculation and retention rates of men and boys in the educational system and social programming for men at risk of being in conflict with the justice system.

Gender Advisory Council

The GOJ shall establish a Gender Advisory Council (GAC) as multi-sectoral body charged with guiding the implementation, monitoring and evaluation of the National Policy for Gender Equality in conjunction with the Bureau of Gender Affairs. This will contribute to fulfilling the mandate of mainstreaming gender considerations in consultation with the various stakeholders across the island. The terms of reference of the GAC shall also include designing strategies aimed at strengthening and supporting the GOJ's gender mainstreaming efforts. The GAC shall be composed of various representatives of various national sectors appointed for a term no more than three years; the functioning and effectiveness of the GAC and the implementation of the NPGE shall be subject to review after each term.

STAKEHOLDERS

The stakeholders for the NPGE are the GOJ and its MDAs; private sector organizations including for profit and not-for-profits; faith-based and community based organizations; labour unions; service organizations; media and citizens.

TARGETS AND INDICATORS

It is the responsibility of each Ministry and its respective departments and agencies to utilize the strategies and tools above to develop gender responsive strategic plans (and to incorporate gender responsive components to the existing strategic plans) with the support of the BWA. By way of targets, at the very minimum, each ministry is expected to:

1. Make mandatory the collection of sex-disaggregated data related to the operations of each MDA;
2. Allocate budget resources towards gender mainstreaming and associated plans, projects and programmes;
3. Appoint a GFP to provide leadership (along with Permanent Secretaries and Executive Officers) to the development and implementation of gender responsive plans, projects and programmes.

Based on the national consultations and research conducted during the development of the NPGE, some targets and indicators have been identified for the following Ministries:

Office of the Prime Minister: Provide executive leadership to the policy including encouraging the private sector to adopt gender mainstreaming strategies and promoting gender equality as a key indicator for national development.

Office of the Cabinet: Facilitate gender mainstreaming in the policy development across government as well as in the public sector modernization process.

Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade: Ensure that international agreements and trade policies facilitate gender equality. In accordance with Article 8 of CEDAW, ensure to that women, on equal terms with men and without any discrimination, have the opportunity to represent their Governments at the international level and to participate in the work of international organizations.

Ministry of Finance and Public Service: Ensure that there are adequate budget allocations to facilitate gender equality and seek to incorporate gender responsive budgeting practices into the creation of the national budget. Institute measures to ensure the social protection of persons engaged in social reproduction and the unpaid care economy by collecting data in the national accounts on the monetary value of unpaid work.

Ministry of Justice: Eliminate discrimination against women by updating existing legislation affecting women to ensure consistency with CEDAW. Enhance women's awareness of their legal rights through legal literacy programmes for women. Ensure the administration of justice is equitable and does not disproportionately affect men or women. Finalise and enact Sexual Harassment Policy and legislation. Harmonize the age of consent for boys and girls.

Ministry of National Security: Design and implement a comprehensive crime plan which includes strategies to address gender-based violence and other forms of violence against women. Establish a safe house and 24-hour hotline to temporarily assist persons who are the victims of human trafficking. Employ temporary special measures to increase the representation of women in the Jamaica Constabulary Force.

Ministry of Education: Address structural barriers that reinforce sex segregation in education by removing sex-segregation in school's curriculum particularly in technical-vocational areas. Transform prevailing ideologies that under-gird a sexual division of labour and reproduces a gender hierarchy in educational institutions by addressing gender bias in the curricula and supporting texts and materials. Research the contributing factors for male attrition at all levels of the school system.

Ministry of Industry, Investment and Commerce: Ensure the provision of support services to women in small, micro and medium enterprise by lobbying the financial sector for the increase in the share of capital available to women for enterprise and for collateral requirements for women to be more reflective of the actual assets women have access to.

Ministry of Energy and Mining: Conduct gender analyses of environmental impact assessments to evaluate the extent to which men and women are affected by the extractive industries. Ensure hiring practices in the extractive industries are equitable.

Ministry of Tourism: Ensure equal employment opportunities for men and women in the tourism sector. Consistently enable equal access to male and female nationals to the country's natural resources.

Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries: Develop and implement strategies to alleviate poverty and other vulnerabilities among female farmers by establishing cooperatives to reduce costs and increase production options specifically for women engaged in agriculture. Address the sexual division of labour in the agricultural industry by training women in jobs that were previously designated for the men and men for jobs previously designated for women.

Ministry of Water and Housing: Ensure that women and girls have access to sanitation and potable water. Ensure that housing solutions are equitably distributed. Conduct gender analysis to evaluate accessibility of NHT loans and continue to facilitate single parents, especially women, with lending instruments.

Ministry of Labour and Social Security: Eliminate gender disparity in wages by reviewing legislation on equal pay for equal work and ensuring that the provisions are enforced. Improve the working conditions of men and women in low paying sectors by establishing working conditions and social security benefits in keeping with ILO Decent Work Agenda for workers in lowest paying sectors including contract workers, including addressing sexual harassment and HIV/AIDS in the workplace. Upon the finalization of the Sexual Harassment Policy, create mechanisms for persons to report and have redress for labour issues involving sexual harassment.

Ministry of Health: Target men with regards to their health-seeking behaviours to encourage on-going healthcare and to prevent the high rate of late diagnosis of illnesses in men. Conduct research on the high male suicide rate to design and implement programming to redress the problem. Ensure that the country remains on target for achieving the MDG goals with respect to reducing maternal mortality rates and improving reproductive health indicators. Once there is a final and agreed upon national position on abortions, ensure that women have access to safe and affordable procedures.

Ministry of Youth, Sports and Culture: As the ministry with the chief responsibility for gender affairs, to provide budgetary support to the BWA and forge strategic partnerships with other ministries and the private sector organizations to promote gender equality as a transformative cultural good. Take greater measures to monitor and regulate cultural products (especially in the music industry), which proliferate messages celebrating the exploitation and abuse of women and girls. Increase access to funding for female and male athletes competing in sports and athletics events, which are traditionally dominated by the opposite sex. Ensure that all youth outreach initiatives are designed to consider the differentiated needs of girls and boys in society.

Ministry of Transport and Works: To increase road safety awareness among men and boys in order to reduce the number of accidents through a public education campaign targeting male. Conduct research on access to public and private transportation and the extent to which men or women rely more on publicly funded transportation options. Contribute to safer cities for women and girls by implementing mechanisms to police gender based violence on public transportation and in public spaces.

A more comprehensive account of targets and indicators can be found in Appendix 4.

PROPOSED LEGISLATIVE AGENDA

The NPGE will have implications for all current and GOJ policies, programmes and legislation. In the interest of equality and equity, the language, implementation and effect of these must be analysed and weighed in accordance with the NPGE.

Legislation will be reviewed for amendments and changes which will bring them in line with the NPGE. Some of the key pieces of legislation which will have to be reviewed include but will not be limited to:

Employment (Equal Pay for Men and Women) Act
Fundamental Rights (Additional Provisions) (Interim) Act
Housing Act
Human Employment and Resource Training Act
Jamaica Social Welfare Commission Act
Labour Relations and Industrial Disputes Act
Land Development and Utilization Act
Maintenance Act
Marriage Act
Married Women's Property Act
Maternity Leave Act
Matrimonial Causes Act
Pensions Act
Poor Relief Act
Representation of the People Act
Registration (of Births and Deaths) Act
Status of Children Act
Women (Employment of) Act

IMPLEMENTATION

The Policy will be implemented through a multi-sectoral approach. Permanent Secretaries and Chief Executive Officers in all ministries, departments and agencies (MDAs) will be ultimately responsible for the implementation of the principles and goals of the NPGE as they relate to their own entities. The BWA will consult and collaborate with all MDAs to assist with the implementation process that shall be monitored by the Gender Advisory Council. (See Appendix 3). The gender mainstreaming process will be facilitated by Gender Focal Points (GFPs) established within each MDA. GFPs are the responsibility centre, which coordinates the gender activities within each MDA. GFP mechanisms are located in different sectoral ministries to ensure incorporation of gender concerns and needs in policies, plans and programmes.

MONITORING AND EVALUATION

In order to ensure regular review of the NPGE, the GAC in conjunction with the Bureau shall oversee the successful implementation, timelines and targets of the NPGE. The focus of this reporting mechanism will be to assess progress based on the indicators described and developed as well as based on guidelines for the way forward.

It is recommended that the BWA and the GAC collaboratively organize the review process and provide the monitoring guidelines to be used to collect information from government ministries and agencies, private sector organizations, and non-governmental organizations. The BWA will take responsibility for ensuring that the monitoring guidelines are distributed to all stakeholders and for collecting and disseminating the information to be presented at the monitoring meetings.

RESOURCE REQUIREMENTS

In the public sector, the NPGE shall be funded through the existing budgets of the MDAs under the directive of the Ministry of Finance and Public Service. In addition, resources shall be required for the establishment and maintenance of the Gender Advisory Council. Historically, the BWA has received extra-budgetary funding from international development partners to support various gender equality initiatives. Gender responsive budgeting will be key to facilitating resources for the success of the NPGE. This process entails evaluating the distribution of existing human and financial resources at the micro and macro levels to analyse how these can be revised to address the most urgent and or systemic gender inequalities in the public sector. Therefore, the resources of the BWA will be strengthened and supported by existing and new resources as determined in the national budgeting process. The success of this policy requires commitment in financial and human resources and gender responsive budgeting will enable an efficient and cost-effective determination of these resources.

CONCLUSION

The NPGE is the result of a process, which began six years ago with the establishment of the Gender Advisory Committee. It is also the logical end of the country's commitment to addressing gender discrimination that began in 1974 with the establishment of the Women's Desk.

The policy provides a generic and comprehensive framework for furthering the GOJ's national development through the promotion of gender equality and women's empowerment and it incorporates all of the principles and tenets affirmed by the country through international and regional agreements which recognize the role that men and women must equally play in a country's development. It offers a road map for future legislation to further entrench gender equality as a national value and constitutive element of how Jamaicans reflect upon themselves as a citizenry and provides the nation with tools to disavow and dismantle debilitating gender stereotypes, discrimination and patriarchy and its operatives.

Jamaica has been and, with the passage of the NPGE, will remain a regional stalwart with respect to advancing the rights of the nation's women, men, boys and girls.

APPENDICES

Appendix 1

Definition of Key Terms

- Human Development: The Human Development Report (HDR) published in 1995 by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) offered a much more expansive definition of “development” in general and “human development” in particular with more of a focus on equality of treatment for both women and men. The purpose of the development of the HDR stated was to ‘enlarge all human choices, not just income’. In this respect it changed the conventional thinking around the development debate from a focus on strictly economic concerns to viewing development as more personal, human, and therefore more sustainable.

Human development was also now defined with four essential components: productivity, equity, empowerment, and sustainability. More significantly the HDR incorporated a gender-equal and rights-based approach to development that put men and women at the centre of the development process. It is best remembered and often quoted that “Human development, if not engendered, is endangered.”

- Sex is the biological and physical features of being male or female.
- Gender refers to roles and responsibilities that have been socially constructed and imposed on women and men as a result of the biological differences between them as females and males.
- Gender relations refer to the way women and men relate to each other based on their position in society as a result of division of resources, responsibilities, benefits, rights, power, and privilege. When both men’s and women’s positions and life experiences are examined, policy makers will be better able to analyse behavioural patterns based on who has more social, economic, and political power and authority and based on the amount of value or worth given to women’s positions and experiences as opposed to men’s.
- Gender analysis refers to the use of sex and gender as quantitative and qualitative ways of conceptualising information. Quantitative gender analysis is the collection and analysis of sex-disaggregated data which reveals the differential impact of development activities on women and men and the effect gender roles and responsibilities have on development efforts and processes. Qualitative gender analysis is the tracing of historical, political, economic, social and cultural forces in order to clarify how and why these differential impacts, roles and responsibilities have come about.

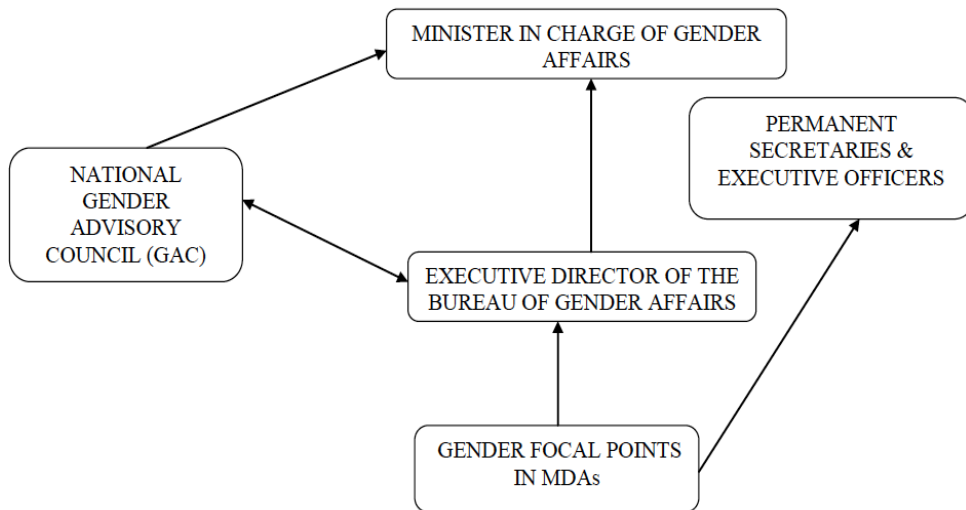

- Sex-disaggregated Data is information collected quantitatively and qualitatively (via questionnaires, observation and other techniques) to assess the impact of policies, plans, and projects on women separately from men.
- Gender Perspective is a form of analysis or point of view that takes into consideration how women and men are affected differently by development (economic, political, social, legal, cultural, and environmental) processes.
- Gender Mainstreaming refers to the consistent use of a gender perspective to assess the implications for women and men of any policies, plans, programmes, and projects in any area and at all levels so that women and men benefit equally, and inequality is not perpetuated. The ultimate goal is to achieve gender equality.
- Gender Awareness is having an understanding of the unequal socio-economic, political, and cultural factors underlying sex-based discrimination and analysing programmes, policies, and projects as a result of that understanding for the differential impact they will have on women and men.
- Gender Equality is the equal valuing of the similarities of and differences between women and men so that they have equal conditions for contributing to and benefiting from economic, social, cultural and political resources and institutions based on an exact same measure and quantity to affect all (women, men, girls, and boys) in the same way. The different behaviour, aspirations, and needs of all would be considered, valued, and favoured equally.
- Gender Equity is the fair and impartial socio-economic compensation or material outcome as a result of equal access to and sharing of all resources and institutions without regard to sex or gender; To ensure fairness, measures must often be put in place to compensate for historical and social disadvantages that prevent women and men from operating on a level playing field.
- Gender Bias is to have a preconceived prejudiced or discriminatory action, thought, or treatment towards one sex over another (female or male) based on an inability or failure to recognize the differences between women's and men's needs, benefits, access to resources, access to power or socio-political status and this bias helps to perpetuate gender-based discrimination.
- Gender Neutral originally, the reference focused on the use of language (lexicon) which challenged the assumption/tradition that masculine nouns, pronouns and adjectives include both male and female. This tradition was considered gender-exclusive by subsuming the female in the male terms which served as both a cause and an effect of the invisibility of women's contribution. Examples of gender-inclusive language are 'chairperson' rather than 'chairman' and 'he or she' rather than 'he'. In recent times the term 'gender neutral' is also used to mean taking an approach that has no significant differential impact whether positive or negative for women and men. However policies seldom if ever have the same effect on women as they do on men.

- Empowerment is the process of gaining access to develop capacities or capabilities with a view to participating actively in shaping one's own life or community in economic, social, and political terms.
- Empowerment of Women is the social, economic, political, and legal enabling of women by granting or reinforcing rights, abilities, and access to resources and institutions and allows equal participation previously denied or restricted.
- Patriarchy originally referred to a social system (from anthropology) in which authority was vested in the male head of a household i.e. the "patriarch" who was socially sanctioned to exercise authority over all members of a household including both women and men. The term has since been used to refer to the social, economic, and institutional arrangements of a society where there is a predominance of males in positions of power and authority.

Appendix 5

1 Summary of Desk Review findings

Discussion Area	2 Main Gender Issues
1. Gender And Poverty	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ The percentage of female- headed households in poverty was higher in the rural areas than in the other towns and the KMA. ▪ Female-headed household consumption plummeted by as much as 14 per cent in contrast to male-headed households, whose consumption fell by 1.7 per cent in 2004 ▪ In 2002, the parishes with the highest levels of poverty were St. Ann,, Portland and Trelawny ▪ Given the triple role that women face- childbearing, employment and managing households- they lack the time and resources needed for them to escape poverty and improve their employability. ▪ Poverty increases migration rates and this has a negative impact on the families left behind. ▪ Poverty in the inner city needs policy attention and the role of women in the criminal activities is disturbing.
2. Gender And Education	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ There is little conscious effort being made to re-construct education to meet the demands of globalization. ▪ Females out-performed males at all three levels of the education system. ▪ Daily attendance rates were better for girls throughout the three levels of the education system. ▪ The girls are over-represented in the humanities and arts. Women practise “self exclusion’ and gravitate to “soft subjects” at the higher levels of education. Gender socialization in the schools facilitates this phenomenon. ▪ The survival rates to Grade 5 for the girls have been consistently higher than those for the boys. ▪ The literacy level is higher among females. ▪ The literacy rates show that for the 75-and-over age group,- while only five of ten Jamaican women were functionally literate; this still represented a higher ratio than the four in ten for their male counterparts. ▪ Despite the numerical advantage in the education

	system, women are poorly positioned to command a strong position in the labour market
3. Gender And Labour	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ The ILO issues of “decent work” and “decent pay” are concerns for both sexes. ▪ There are no flexible work agreements and no paternity leave ▪ The female participation rate has been consistently lower than that of males. ▪ Males, continued to represent the majority of the employed labour force at 57.9 per cent in 2004. ▪ Gender differentials in unemployment were evident with the female unemployment rate, more than twice that of men. The male unemployment rate was 7.9 while the female unemployment rate was 16.4 in 2004. ▪ Although, women are accessing education more and performing better in the education system, their access to employment is lower than that of men. ▪ Youth unemployment is a major concern. ▪ Occupational Sex segregation is high at 35.8 (Ricketts, 2003) and on the increase. This means that 35.8 per cent of the each gender group would have to change their occupation in order to achieve gender equality. ▪ Women tend to be employed in the low wage occupations in the service sector. ▪ At the highest level of decision making the males outnumber the females. While women participate in the parliamentary process on equal terms with men, their participation has not translated in significant number at the highest level of governance ▪ Gender norms and stereotypes can result in women acquiring different levels of education. ▪ Women tend to be employed in low-wage occupation in the service sectors. ▪ There are wage differentials” associated with the glass ceiling and the glass escalator phenomena. ▪ The occupations in which women dominate are not unionized. ▪ There is no recognition of sexual harassment in our laws. ▪ The treatment of HIV/AIDS patients in the workplace. ▪ There are more males working in the overseas government facilitated programmes but females dominate in the hotel industry.
4. Gender And Health	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Based on international guidelines, the improvement in the infant mortality rate is not sufficiently rapid.

	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Maternal Mortality rates have not significantly improved through the years. ▪ The problem of “botched” pregnancies still persists. ▪ There was an increase in pregnancies among adolescents who are still at school, particularly secondary (42.2 per cent in 1997 to 48.3 per cent in 2002) and post secondary (from 6.5 per cent to 11.1 per cent). ▪ The proportion of unplanned pregnancies among younger adolescents increased to 97.4 per cent in 2002, up from 90.9 per cent in 1997. ▪ Data from the Ministry of Health show that females access the public health centres more than the males. ▪ This is a cultural phenomenon as men report illness at a more advanced stage than women, resulting in higher morbidity rates for women and higher mortality rates for men. ▪ For injuries (intentional and unintentional) the males are accessing the services much more ▪ Males are particularly vulnerable to death by road accidents ▪ More male children manifest Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD), Conduct Disorder and Learning Disorder ▪ More female children manifest depressive disorders. ▪ Among the suicide cases, males dominate ▪ Males are more susceptible to AIDS. ▪ Females in the age groups 10-19 years and 20-29 years are more likely than males to be infected with AIDS ▪ Stigmatization of HIV/AIDS patients remain a problem ▪ Prostitution and HIV/AIDS remain a concern
5. Gender And Trade	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ The plight of the sugar workers and the recent EU decision (on the sharp reduction of sugar prices) need immediate attention ▪ Globalization and trade liberalization, restructuring and downsizing of formal sector have had a more negative impact on women ▪ Women may be affected differently by trade due to social and cultural discrimination, which limits their access to education, technological training, credit, and land. ▪ Because of their domination in the service sectors, women are more susceptible to external shocks. ▪ Many jobs for low-skilled women were lost when trade liberalization prompted many multi-national businesses to relocate from the free trade zones in Jamaica to Mexican free trade zones. ▪ The micro enterprise sector is used as a holding

	ground for low-skilled labour-predominantly female and is not currently structured to contribute to technological or economic growth <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Women often earn lower wages than men for the same or similar types of jobs, and are usually the last workers hired and the first fired in the liberalized economy. ▪ Trade policies lack gender sensitivity as a result of the exclusion of women from the decision-making and negotiating process
6. Gender And Agriculture	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ In all parishes, men owned more of the agricultural land. ▪ The majority of women who own farms are small holders with an average farm size significantly smaller than that of the men's. Any limitation of small-scale agriculture affects women more seriously than men ▪ Female agricultural workers receive lower wages even if they work twice as hard as the men. ▪ Proper working hours and conditions are not taken into consideration for women ▪ The operations of the female higglers are economically inefficient and they suffer severe hardships and indignities ▪ The Sugar and the banana industries have been negatively affected by new trade regulations.
7. Gender And Social Protection Programmes	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Limited access to health insurance for both sexes ▪ For the PATH in the categories health and disabled there were more male beneficiaries. Females dominate in the other categories ▪ The public assistance programmes include Rehabilitation Grants, Compassionate Grants and Emergency Grants. More females benefited from these programmes. ▪ More females have been accessing the loans from MIDA but more males received loans for their business in the agricultural sector. ▪ Limited protection of workers in the informal sector ▪ More males are in infirmaries and receive less support from their families in their old age.
8. Gender And Coping Strategies	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Females receive more support from relatives home and abroad ▪ Illegal activities by both men and women e.g. women become drug couriers, men turn to crime ▪ There is heavy reliance on remittances from abroad which has institutionalized a “dependency syndrome” by the poor and a macro economy heavily reliant on remittances ▪ Children are kept from school during economic depression in the homes

9. Gender And Violence	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ More males are involved in crime ▪ The role of women in “protecting” and “supporting” the male criminals is disturbing. ▪ Data on gender based violence perpetrated by women are not readily available ▪ Violence places a heavy burden on the health system
12. Gender and Legislation	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Implementation of legal reform is slow ▪ A clear relationship does not exist between Law Reform, public education and court cases with violence against women and girls. The Court System is not user-friendly
13. Gender Mainstreaming	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ The full integration of gender perspectives in legislation, national budgets, public policies, programmes and projects is not complete ▪ All statistics related to individuals are not analyzed to reflect problems, issues and questions related to women and men in society ▪ Some policies still reflect a gender bias e.g. sports for men receive more funding than those for women e.g. men’s cricket is far more supported than women’s cricket
14. Culture	Many of the gender inequalities persist because of culture and socially learned attitudes. How to change the pervasive influence of gender stereotyping in a patriarchal society The cultural and institutional barriers to single men who want to be good parents Crisis of masculinity among men, especially young men Gender socialization, the treatment of boys by teachers Gender socialization in the homes Cultural norms exist whereby young girls enter into relations with AIDS infected older men. Men and their reluctance to use a condom

List of findings from the National Consultations

Economy and Social Security

- Wages, on average, favour males but with variations in groups depending on socio-economic status, ethnicity and occupation;
- Occupational sex segregation with women predominately in lower level employment;
- In preparing both sexes for the careers and for employment the focus of the educational programme is on academic areas with not enough emphasis on technical skills required to support national development;
- With the contraction of the economy only particular career options are worth striving for – no specific examples given so not clear if one or both sexes impacted;
- Women seen as being socialised in ways that prepare them for management positions possessing attributes such as patience, sensitivity and empathy but at the same time do not handle these positions well because of their fear and insecurity in taking on management positions;
- Women who excel in terms of managing in the private domain are not seen as capable of carrying these skills over into the public domain and therefore experience the glass ceiling phenomenon;
- Women felt that there was an inordinate amount of work associated with middle management positions where they are concentrated;
- Women feel that they are the more qualified group in many work settings but are unfairly treated in relation to standards of performance set by males with patriarchal leadership styles;
- Need to enforce labour laws and conventions agreed to, particularly policies that call for gender parity in remuneration for work of equal value;
- Attempts to mainstream gender in economic systems and structures and ensure more equal opportunities and benefits for both sexes is constrained by entrenched ideologies and practices and role socialization resulting in a sexual division of labour which underpins capitalist economic systems and the dichotomy between gendered private and public domains;
- Men who do not meet up to the social norm of male provider and breadwinner and are unable to meet the economic demands of family often feel emasculated and abandon other contributions they could make to the family resulting in paternal alienation. This is often reinforced by female partners;
- Flexi-time and paternity leave endorsed as welcome additions to labour regulations since both would facilitate positive outcomes such as better time management and the emotional well-being of the family and would ultimately increase workplace productivity. However seen as potentially creating conflict with the Christian community;
- In keeping with prevailing notions of gender roles, in relation to work, the most important issue for men was remuneration and level of income while for women it was access to maternity leave. These issues were also seen as important in relation to the increasing phenomenon of female headed households;
- Men benefit more from participation in the labour market.
- The fact that a woman could not access public housing if her husband was already a beneficiary was seen as a problem;
- The fact that women are often the main economic provider was seen as resulting in a number of problems such as the upbringing of boys and general absenteeism from the home with less parental control;

- The involvement of women in the sex industry was seen as an economic imperative only in some instances but in other cases as an outcome of anti-social values and attitudes. The latter view was seen as an expression of lack of tolerance for alternative lifestyles as well as a social status response to those seen as being of lower social status.

Education & Culture

- Factors militating against the young (particularly boys) obtaining an education were seen as lack of financial resources and the immaturity of parents who did not value education both as a means to an end and an end in itself and who could not assist with homework etc. and thereby contributing to intergenerational illiteracy and delinquency;
- Teachers are seen as critical to reversing gender stereotypes in selection of vocations and professions and in socializing boys and preparing them for more involvement in care-giving;
- Educational attainment was seen as less important for males than females since in the case of males they 'could hustle and get by'. It was therefore felt that in the case of dysfunctional families both sexes are affected but if there is a failure in the education system girls would be more affected since the returns on education is higher for females than for males;
- Female participants were of the opinion that the factors contributing to male poor academic performance was linked to female headed households, the absence of fathers and socialization into sex-linked gender roles;
- Addressing gender socialisation in the home for both sexes was seen as also important and the establishment of a mentorship programme was seen as fundamental to the project of encouraging boys to remain in schools;
- Prevailing gender ideologies that support a SDOL affect educational performance. Boys from the lower SES perceive education as unimportant for surviving while girls from the same SES group select traditional areas of study and reinforce the positioning of women in supportive and care-giving roles and functions in the labour force and home;
- Males are represented in administrative positions in the education system but not in classrooms. Males should therefore be provided with incentives to enter the teaching profession. This however would create an anomaly counter to the principle of equal pay for equal work and would reinforce the accepted gender norm of higher remuneration for males;
- Inadequacy of curriculum, infrastructure and resources, both physical and human, for children with special needs (predominately male);
- There is a need to move away from a gendered curriculum and prevailing attitudes which deter the crossover of either sex into non-traditional areas e.g. boys into needlework and girls into carpentry.

Rural women

- Rural women do the same kinds of work as men, especially in agriculture, but because women do not own their land, their efforts are often unrecognised.
- The current system regarding land ownership is disrespectful to women.
- Rural women are often neglected when trade agreements are being designed or entered in to. These are agreements usually impact them both directly and indirectly.

Men

- Absentee fathers was identified as being an important contributor to male delinquency;
- Men suffer from low self-esteem which impacts on their capacity to define specific goals for their education and career path and to persevere to achieve these goals;
- Men's low level of educational attainment and illiteracy, their involvement in gangs that act as pseudo-fathers and role models, lack of or low self-esteem, illiteracy and teachers' attitudes create problems for lower SES males.

All Male Interest Group

- Identity, low self-esteem, inadequate education and lack of opportunities are challenges that men face;
- Women because of their desire to be independent help to exclude men from their responsibility in parenting and the legal system as it relates to child custody is biased in favour of women.
- Men experience conflict between their desire to measure up to the image of masculinity promoted by prevailing sub-cultures vis-à-vis what they personally regard as appropriate behaviour;
- Male involvement in domestic violence as perpetrators is linked to macho definitions of men as unemotional beings who do not talk through issues but act out feelings of discontent and frustration in violent aggressive ways. To act otherwise is to be effeminate and not meet up to the heterosexual male norm;
- Abortion should be allowed unless health conditions constituted a risk factor;
- There should be tolerance of homosexuality;
- Social and economic arrangements benefited males at the expense of females.

Youth

- Both sexes are faced with challenges by living in single-parent households and both are exposed to peer pressure;
- Girls vulnerable to pregnancy and carnal abuse and boys to drug use and abuse.

Reproductive Health & Rights

- Paternity leave seen as desirable in terms of family and shared role of nurturing. However, employers would most likely view it as an unnecessary expense and it could lead to the displacement of household helpers;
- Need to establish a secretariat which can receive complaints of sexual harassment at the workplace;
- More disadvantages than advantages for legalizing sex-work and encouraging sex tourism would have negative repercussions such as increased STIs, involvement of minors, increases in the number of abortions as well as creating negative publicity for the country;
- Because women are economically dependent, this diminishes the power they have to negotiate safe sex and insist on condom use and therefore expose themselves to unwanted pregnancies and STIs;
- Factors driving high fertility rates among some females included lack of effective parenting, changes in values and attitudes including open sexual activity and poor parenting which is regarded as the biggest contributor to the problem;

- Factors driving maternal and infant mortality included economic and attitudinal factors as well as the decrease in the child-bearing age;
- Girls are vulnerable in relation to teenage pregnancy and carnal abuse;
- Conflicting views and positions with regard to making condoms available to children (minors);
- The dissonance between knowledge of HIV transmission and sexual behaviour
- Factors contributing to maternal and child mortality included domestic violence, mother's use of dangerous substances, lack of information and no time off for mothers to attend pre-natal clinics;
- No gender differences identified in relation to the social and health risks faced by PLWHAs;
- Abortion should not be legalised;
- An age of consent for boys needs to be established particularly with the emergence of the issue of older female predators;
- The involvement of young girls in sexual relationships with older men stem from peer pressure, economic needs and delinquent parenting and puts girls at risk for early pregnancy and STIs;
- Since females have faster rates of maturation (cognitively), it increases the chance of them becoming involved with older males and therefore being more at risk for pregnancy and contracting STIs;
- Although young males and females wish to use condoms they are embarrassed to acquire them because of prevailing attitudes and being labelled promiscuous;
- The bombardment of young people, from an early age, with messages and images about sexuality and the impact of this on their own sexuality in terms of practice and expression.

Institutional Arrangements

All Male Interest Group

- The best arrangement for promoting gender equality and to advance gender mainstreaming is through legal reform;
- To address male disadvantage and policies that discriminate against men an institutional mechanism that deals with the needs of both women and men should be put in place.

Governance

Transformational politics would:

- Bring people together into a common purpose;
- Enable members in communities to participate effectively in decision at the local level;
- Build and promote equity across the various sectors and interests in the society;
- Enable people to experience gender justice;
- Reduce and eventually eliminate tribalism in communities and in the society.
- Governance a process at all levels: household, community and nationally.
- Women's involvement in decision making is crucial for effecting change.
- Women are in leadership positions in the household; women have skills and experiences that are critical to decision making. This skill and role must be carried forward at the community level.

Recognition of women's leadership, roles and responsibilities:

- Garvey (1914) recognised the importance of the partnership between women and men in leadership.
- Concrete, practical action to come out of policies

Human Rights & Legislation

- Little political will for enforcing existing legislation and gender-specific policies in particular;
- The most sustainable measure for channelling legislation on sexual harassment at the workplace is to create a partnership with trade unions.

Violence & Psycho-Social Health

- Media perpetuates a form of sexual harassment through advertisements which portray negative images;
- Pervasiveness of sexual harassment linked to delinquent parenting, lack of positive values;
- Prevailing popular culture, particularly the lyrics of songs aired and performed, was seen as contributing to the level of violence, generally, and against women, in particular, in society;
- Although homosexuality should be seen as a human rights issue it should not be tolerated;
- In legislation and policies, rape and sexual harassment should be made gender-neutral since males can also be victims of these offences;
- non-penetrative acts of sexual aggression should be regarded as sexual; violations so that perpetrators of such acts can be held accountable and charged;
- Laws related to incest should be amended to include grandmothers as victim and stepfathers as perpetrators.
- The legal definition of a 'child' in terms of age needs to be harmonised
- Problem of sexual violence seen as very severe and largely male generated although women are also implicated;
- Police reluctant to investigate violence between heterosexual couples – they do so more readily in cases of violence between two men if they are in a homosexual relationship;
- Female generated domestic abuse goes unreported because the men are embarrassed to make reports and if they do the police are contemptuous;
- The root causes of domestic abuse of women are social and economic which can be addressed by legislation and re-socialisation.

OVERVIEW OF METHODOLOGY

A Gender Advisory Committee (GAC) was established in 2004 to provide strategic oversight for the development of a National Policy for Gender Equality through the agency of the national machinery – the Bureau of Gender Affairs.

A national consultative process ensued in keeping with the national consultation code, fostering stakeholder input and soliciting recommendations from discussions on a variety of gender issues. Six (6) national regional consultations were held with women’s organizations, the public and private sector, and the general public, as well as a consultation with special interest groups representing the Uniformed Forces, the Media Association of Jamaica, Faith-based organizations, the Combined Disabilities group, the Media, Men’s Groups, and the Youth (Young Men and Women). The result is the development of a comprehensive gender policy framework for identifying and addressing obstacles to gender equality to inform decision-making for public plans, policies, and programmes.

A technical working group led by the Chair of the Gender Advisory Committee (GAC) developed a draft policy outline. This draft outline included the findings and recommendations from the national consultations. The draft was presented at a forum of all stakeholders who further reviewed, discussed and made additional recommendations including targets and indicators for monitoring and evaluation.

The additional contributions from stakeholders were all reviewed by the technical working group and the draft document was developed and refined. Final amendments including new and emerging issues were incorporated into a revised draft document to constitute what is now a Draft National Policy for Gender Equality. It is anticipated that this Gender Policy Framework will be instrumental in guiding the Gender Action Plan which will result from the policy’s implementation strategy.
